DREAMS.

How oft' do I dream of a summer,
Of a summer that has long been past;
Of a time so fair and golden,
That was too bright and happy to last.
And sometimes a glance or a whisper.
And sometimes, a well known strain,
And oft the perfume of a flower
Brings back its methory again.

That twined o'er the window so low,

To enter and stray with me there.

Of the joys awaiting us there;
And try to weave in my fancy
A dream of the city so fair,
Whose walls are the brightest of jewels,
And its columns the morning light,
With its sparkling sea of jasper
And its pearly gates of white.
